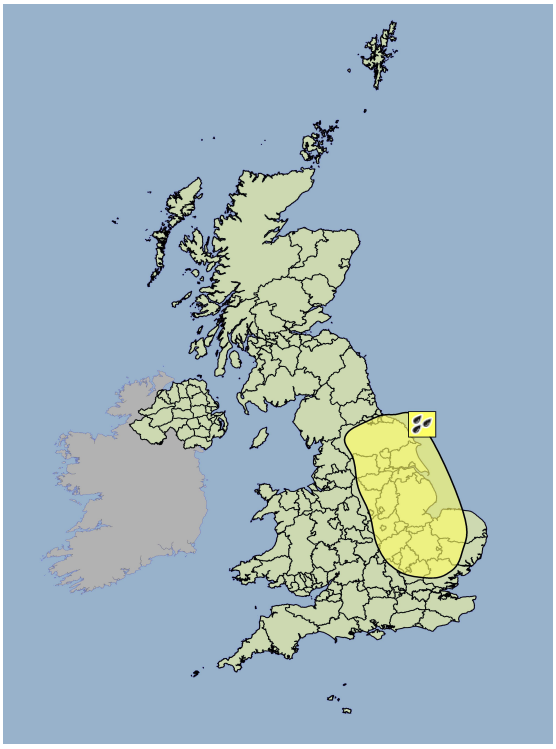
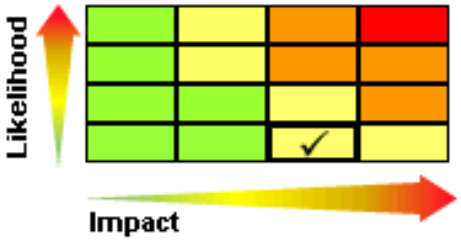
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Plenty of energy and moisture in the atmosphere again today, but (as often in such situations) it is difficult to pin down the counties most at risk from intense downpours. Around 20 mm of rain could fall within an hour at a few locations but the majority of places will see much less.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 12:00 on Mon, 09th Jun 2014 until 21:00 on Mon, 09th Jun 2014

Scattered but potentially intense thundery downpours are likely to develop from the middle of today onwards and drift north across the region. The public should be aware that where these occur, they could bring a risk of surface water flooding, with lightning, hail and gusty winds posing additional hazards locally.

Drier conditions will follow from the southwest during the evening.

This warning has been updated to include parts of northern England
